The train arrivals swelled the multitude The train arrivals swelled the multitude on the streets to an extent to impede the ordinary progress on all the chief thoroughfares. Washington street presented a black mass of humanity hours before the services were entered upon at St. Paul's, and long before the passage of the column the windows of its business blocks were filled with occupants. The eye rested on a waiting multitude, which occupied apparently every vantage point along the broad thoroughfare.

ently every vantage point along the broad thoroughfure.

Perhaps the most effective draping is that at the post-office building, where wide bands of black cover the wall space of the first story, leaving only the doors and windows, visible, not a line nor spot of white raieves the entire building.

The County Court-house, where the remains lay in state until Monday evening, and the State House, are tastefully draped, but in much less elaborate style, owing to their much more massive exteriors. A striking feature of the drapery of buildings is the almost universal use of white material as a border, or in bows or rosettes upon the black. Legends are very few. One business house on Washington street has the words, 'I am free at last'—the last words of the dead Vice President. Portraits of the deceased, all shrouded in black, are profusely hung in windows. The general effect tells in mute eloquence of the high respect with which the people of Indianapolis regarded their fellow-townsman, and of the tender sympathy which moves them to thus try to mitigate the grief of her upon whom the blow of this National bereavement has fallen with heaviest force. heaviest force.

LAST LOOK AT THE DEAD. At 9 o'clock Mrs. Hendricks entered the com for her last leave-taking, accompanied by her brother and Mrs. Morgan. The ordeal was most trying, and the desolate woman seemed to be utterly prostrated, cliaging to the last to the clay so soon to be hidden forever from her view, and impressed with the life-like appearance of the dead. She desired to preserve this last scene, so, late as it was, she sent for a photographer to take a picture of the casket. Before he arrived delegations from distant cities began to come, and were permitted to pass through and view the remains. While the photographer was engaged at his work the members of the 'abinet, the Judges of the Supreme Cour and others from Washington entered and were unfortunately detained a few minutes by the process. It was 11 o'clock when the casket was replaced and the stream of visitors again passed by and out through the side door. Shortly after this the pall-bearers arrived. The draped hearse and the carriages for the family and friends were marshaled before the dear.

FINAL REMOVAL OF THE BODY. This was done without further leavetaking. The police and military kept the curious but always respectable mass of people out of the way, and the little cavalcade moved quietly with its military escort through densely lined streets to the Cathedral of St. Paul.

SERVICES AT THE CHURCH. The casket was borne into the church at 11:40 o'clock, the vast congregation having already been seated, with the exception of the immediate relatives and the church vestry. The officiating clergy, four in number, Bishop Knickerbacker, of this diocese; Rev. Dr. Stringfellow, of Montgomery, Ala, the first rector of St. Paul, and under whose ministration Mr. Hendricks joined the church; Rev. Dr. Fulton, of St. Louis, a former rector of St. Paul's, and Rev. Dr. Jenckes, the present rector, in their robes of office, met the remains at the main entrance of the Cathedral on Illinois street. Preceded by a guard of the Indianapolis Light Infantry the body was borne up the central aisle, the clergymen and members of the vestry going in advance. Immediately in their rear were the officers of the U. S. Army, in full uniform. On the north side of the church were the Governors of the States present, with their staffs.

The FUNERAL PROCESSION.

The bells of all the city churches began tolling when the remains were taken from the house, and continued their pealing during the continuation of the church rites and while the procession was on its long march to Crown Hill Cemetery. There was very little delay in the movement of the great column when once the distinguished people who had composed the church audience had been assigned their carriages. Its formation had been completed during the progress of the services in the Cathedral. The column was preceded by a mounted police escort, who were followed by the Columbus Barracks Band and the Richardson Zouaves, who immediately preceded the hearse. The latter was drawn by six black horses, wearing the black paraphernalis worn by the animals attached to the funeral car which bore the remains of General Grant to the grave. On either side of the hearse was a guard from the Indianapolis Light Infantry, carrying their guns at the position of "reverse arms." An escort of citizens, composed of Oscar B. The column took ap its line of march at 12:48 p. m., but its progress was retarded in the business district owing to the blockading crowds, which far outnumbered the moving column. It proceeded slowly through the great masses of people on Washington street. The military organizations attempted to march with company Washington street. The military organizations attempted to march with company front, but were repeatedly compelled to break into columns of fours and move by the flank. The carriages were driven three abreast. The movement was slow, the bands playing dirges, making the progress at times almost imperceptible until the column merged upon Meridian street, a broad and handsome avenue leading to the entrance to the beautiful Crown Hill Cemetery. The cortege moved on by the bandsome homes of the wealthy, whose windows and sidewalks were filled with great throngs standing respectfully. whose windows and sidewalks were filled with great throngs standing respectfully. The broad thoroughfare stretched out into the country beyond the limits of the city, and when the head of the column came within sight of the cemetery, a mile distant, the Indianapolis Light Artillery be-

lev. Dr. Jenckes, speaking from the fectern, delivered a touching sermon from the following text:

"Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are over things are lovely, what sever the fields whitese things are over things are over things are over things are lovely in the grave, the substitute of the over the over the over the over the over the over things are over things are over things are over things are lovely in the field and hard the over minutes before the firs proached the cemetery.

Were impressive. There was no special restraint upon admittance to the cemetery, and several hundred persons had gathered about the grave before the funeral party arrived. The body of the procession had disbanded after passing beyond the city limits, and only the military, with the mounted escort, entered the cemetery. The space reserved about the grave had only been defined by placing a line of plants and evergreen twigs, which was quite sufficient to protect from intrusion. Just before the head of the column came up the crowed was pushed back further to give ample room to the friends, who were assigned the side of the grave from where the column approached. This order was cheerfully obeyed.

When Mrs. Hendricks, leaning upon the matting placed alongside the grave and before the casket was removed from the hearse, she paused to look down into the least resting place of her dead, only to see a picture of lovliness in its lining of green leaves and flowers. Then she turned to the grave of her child, which had been made glorious with a covering of smilax and flowers. and read in letters of white his baby and she turned with the bravery of heroism to witness the last rites.

The tender love which she discerned in this treatment of her treasure by sympathetic friends, seemed to give her courage for the last ordeal. Her glance then caught the monument decorated with the National flag enveloping a life-like portrait of her husband facing the grave, and she turned with the bravery of heroism to witness the last rites.

There had been no rainfall for a brief period, but the sky was lowering. Just as the coffin was placed beside the grave there was a slight sprinkling of rain, causing many to recall the old saying, "Blessed are the dead whom the rain rains on." The Columbus Barracks Band at this point played the American hymn and the reading of the service followed. Mrs. Hendricks only leaned more heavily upon Mr. Morgan, resting her bead at last upon his shoulder, but her self-control was bravely maintained.

While the service was read the Congressional Committee, the members of the Cabinet and other distinguished visitors, stood upon the other side of the grave. The words of the clergyman were now and then drowned by the sound of the minute guns, which kept firing until after the interment was over.

which kept firing until after the interment was over.

When the coffin had been lowered into the grave by the colored assistants of the undertaker, and there was nothing remaining to be done—for the placing of the stone, and the filling of the grave was to be attended by the cemetery force—there was a moment's pause, and the silence was broken only by the minute gun. Then Mrs. Hendricks and the friends of the family passed the still oren, but not repellant grave, and dricks and the friends of the family passed the still open, but not repellant grave, and took their carriages.

The people who had waited so respectfully then flocked to the grave to get a nearer view. The military order, Forward march, started the soldiers homeward, the carriages rapidly rolled away, and the distinguished dead was left alone.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Principal Features of a Long Document.

Reform in the Civil Service to be Enforced -Suspension of Silver Coinage-Polygamy to be Crushed---Conservative Course on the WASHINGTON, December 6 .- The message is quite a long document-something over 20,000 words. It deals at length with all important public questions. The President gives very positive expression to his view concerning civil service reform, and insists on it being carried out in the public seron it being carried out in the public service. He thinks it as yet an experiment, where experience is constantly suggesting improvements. In the matter of tariff revision he deprecates such sweeping action as might cripple the national industries, but favors an equalization and such reductions as the question of revenues will admit. Upon the silver question he reaffirms the views he expressed at the time the unlimited coinage men of Congress addressed him their letter. He favors either an immediate suspension of coinage or giving discretion to the President to suspend it when in his judgment the public interest demands it. Upon the Indian question the President occupies about the position of Commissioner Atkirfs. He favors liberal attempts to render the Indians self-supporting, and bring them as rapidly as possible under the operation of the law, like other citizens. He takes decided ground on the Morman question, and favors vigorous measures for the extinction of that evil. He insists upon the Chinese receiving the full protection of the law. In the matter of internal revenue, he suggests that changes might be made which will make the law less annoying. It is said that he favors considerable reduction of taxation. All the subject named above are treated at length and in very positive terms. In calling attention to the death of the Vice President, Mr. Cleveland takes occasion to recommend legislation on the subject of the succession. He also sets forth the necessity of providing more definite legislation governing the counting of the Electoral votes. His position in regard to a new navy, coast defense and internal improvements have not yet become known, but it is believed that he will recommend a very liberal course in all these matters. The President devotes considerable space to the agricultural interests of the country, and urges Congress to do all in its power to aid in their development. It is not expected that the message will go in before Tuesday. vice. He thinks it as yet an experiment,

THE MORMON TROUBLE. ne Bat ery of Artillery Ordered to Fori Douglass---Uneasiness of the War Depa tment.

WASHINGTON, December 6 .- The War Department has recently received such re-ports from its officials in Utah regarding he very unsettled condition of alfairs in that Territory, growing out of the en-forcement of the laws against polygamy, as to cause some uneasiness, but no alarm. The recent shooting of a Mormon by a U. S. Marshal created a great deal of excitement among the Mormons, and some apprehension was felt at Salt Lake that there would be an uprising among them. A battery of artillery was recently ordered from Omaha to Fort Douglass, which is situated a few miles from Salt Lake City. This m. vement, however, was not particularly on account of any fear of a Mormon rebellion. but had been in contemplation for some time. The force now at Fort Douglass consists of a full regment of infantry and a battery of artillery, and is under command of General McCook. In the event of trouble in Utah all the troops in the Department of the Platte, consisting of about 3,000 men, could be concentrated at Fort Douglass in a very few nours. No serious trouble, however, is apprehended by army officials.

INDIANAPOLIS, December 6.-One of the argest fires that has visited Indianapolis n years occurred at 2 o'clock this after noon, entirely destroying the linseed oil nanufactory of J. P. Evans & Co., the only ndustry of the kind in the city. The mils ontained about 100,000 bushels of flaxseed, contained about 100,000 bushels of flaxseed, 25,000 gallons of oil and a considerable quantity of oil cake. A stiff preeze was blowing from the west, causing the fire to burn with great fierceness, and for a time there was great dauger of the flames spreading to adjoining property, in which event a great conflagration would have followed. By hard and skillful work on the part of the firemen, several of whom were slightly injured, the flames were conined to the building in which they originated. The building contained all the machinery used in manufacturing linseed oil. The building, valued at $20,000, was totally destroyed. The machinery, worth 45,000, s damaged to the extent of $35,000, and the flaxseed is nearly a total loss, making the entire loss not less than $150,000. The insurance aggregates $102,500.

AMERICAN ANIMALS.

How Can the Destruction and Extinction of American Game Be Prevented? Mr. Ernest Ingersoll, in a paper just published by the American Geograph-ical Society, makes a startling record of the extinction of wild animals from this continent by the settlement of the country. Much of this lamentable decrease of animal life was unavoidable But Mr. Ingersoll does well to descant upon the ruthless waste of one of our most valuable resources. Only twentyfive years ago the great plains were covered with buffaloes, and Mr. Inger-soll says: "I myself have seen steamboats halted on the Upper Missouri by swimming bands of these finest of wild cattle." But the extension of the Pacific railways has been made the occasion of a needless extermination of them The elk, moose and deer have so deed a similar fate, until now it is said that the elk, which eight year ago i re seen in thousands on the dains of the Sweetwater and in the Wind River Mountains, have practically been driven to their last refuge in the Sout_ern

Rocky Mountain plateau.

Mr. Ingersoll shows that this baleful disturbance in the natural order of animal life is not limited to the land alone Seals, which once disported in the At-lantic surf along this coast southward to Cape May, have retired to the Newfoundland or Labrador coast. The coast has seriously decreased. The feathered tribes, especially the prairie chicken, the wild turkey, ducks and all game birds, have been sadly depleted, and still the slaughter goes on almost unchecked.

Mr. Ingersoll suggests that an arrest might be put upon this uncalled-for destruction by making and enforcing "a law which should permit so-called sport to be indulged only by a selected few who had proved their capacity for common sense and self-restraint." STATE NEWS ITEMS.

THE registry law is unconstitutional. The Supreme Court decided the Daggett habeas corpus case on the 1st. Judges Owens, Follett, Atherton and Johnson were on the bench when Chief Justine Owens announ- | from the cold. ed that the decision of the Court was that Edward Daggett be discharged from custody. No dissenting opinion was spoken, and it is therefore understood that Judge Johnson, Republican, agrees with the three Democratic Judges in the case, and that the decision is unanimous. The discharge of Daggett by the Court is equivalent to a decision that the registry law for Cincinnati and Cleveland is unconstitutional, as the only ground on which Daggett's charge on habeas corpus proceedings was asked by John Follett was the unconstitutionality of the registery law, under which Daggett was arrested and held in custody by Superintendent of Police Hudson. Under this decision Daggett will at once be discharged,
